FIFA 22 introduces “HyperMotion Technology,” a ground-breaking AI powered by player movement data gathered during an intense, real-life football match. Players run and turn the same as they do in every game, although when passing the ball and performing overhead actions, the same player will take on different characteristics depending on the type of movement they make. The data gathered from the same real-life players that participated in the motion capture session will be used to power gameplay. The technology is designed to make the game smarter and more realistic, making it smoother and more reactive, with players, collisions and other gameplay elements working together to create a more authentic experience on the pitch. The player movement data will be used to control game physics, including the way players tackle, run and pass. These actions will be more realistic, with smarter AI. The AI will predict when a player will cut inside or outside, and will make the optimal decision given the player’s position on the pitch, the pass in front and where their teammates are. The AI will make smarter choices during gameplay based on actions during the match. “HyperMotion Technology” works by taking data from the motion capture session and then applying it across game modes. FIFA 22 will use the technology in all game modes, but primarily in the all-new Player Intelligence mode, where it will play a key role in creating a more intelligent experience on the pitch. The mode will include an AI system with a realistic approach to players making decisions throughout the match, ensuring that no player receives a pass or a tackle from an opponent they have not noticed. As well as player movement, “HyperMotion Technology” will also let the AI make more intelligent decisions during gameplay. AI controls such as diving, sprinting, aggressive tackling, taking a throw-in, backheeling and the ability to anticipate a pass will all be taken into consideration as players run, turn and pass. Players will be able to make smarter decisions and produce more fluently paced and realistic gameplay as a result. Finally, FIFA 22 will include a range of new options for players to change the intensity of the game, from a more realistic physics model to different camera perspectives, field sizes, duration and difficulty level. Players will be able to take a gamble and go for a last-ditch tackle or receive a last-second pass. “All eyes are on FIFA and we have been listening to the feedback on how
