Augustine O'Donnell Augustine O'Donnell (born 3 January 1940) is an American astrophysicist. He served as director of the Max Planck Institute for Extraterrestrial Physics in Germany (1994–2000) and is currently the Niels Bohr Professor of Astronomy and Physics at the University of Copenhagen. He has made important contributions to the fields of interferometry and space interferometry and is especially known for his contributions to the field of very-long-baseline interferometry (VLBI). O'Donnell is widely regarded to be one of the founding fathers of modern radio astronomy. He was responsible for the concept of modern VLBI, leading the first European VLBI Network, and setting a new standard for high-sensitivity radio astronomy. O'Donnell's work has contributed significantly to the development of radio astronomy and astrophysics in Europe. His scientific career was characterized by an international stance, by numerous national and international leadership roles, and by very active cooperation with colleagues. Personal history O'Donnell was born in Comacchio, Italy, the son of an Irish Protestant father and an Italian mother. He is married to Ulla Gräff, a Danish nuclear physicist. Education In 1958, O'Donnell enrolled at the University of Cagliari to study physics. However, when he was 17 years of age, he decided to study astronomy. He obtained his first degrees in physics at the University of Milan and completed his Ph.D. in astronomy at the Astronomical Institute of the University of Basel in 1965. Career O'Donnell has spent his career at the Max Planck Institute for Radio Astronomy in Germany. After receiving a professorship in radio astronomy at the University of Ulm, he became head
