Effects of age and time of day on lipopolysaccharide-induced acute lung injury in rats. Lipopolysaccharide (LPS) is a model for septic shock, but elderly patients have an increased morbidity and mortality from sepsis, and the reason is unknown. We investigated the effects of age and time of day on LPS-induced acute lung injury (ALI) in rats. Male Sprague-Dawley rats, 13-22 mo old, were anesthetized and intubated, and then received 25 mg/kg of LPS or saline. Blood samples were obtained for 6 h, and bronchoalveolar lavage was obtained 0, 3, 6, and 24 h after LPS or saline treatment. Lung water content was measured 48 h after LPS or saline treatment, and the effects of age and time of day on the lung water content were compared with t-test analysis. LPS-induced ALI in rats of all ages was evident by the elevated blood concentrations of proinflammatory cytokines and chemokines, and lung histology, 3 h after LPS injection. At 24 h, rats of 13-14 mo old had the highest lavage cell counts, whereas rats of 22-23 mo old had the lowest lavage cell counts. However, there were no significant differences in lung water content between 13-18 mo old rats and 19-22 mo old rats at 48 h after LPS. Furthermore, there were no significant differences between the rats treated at different times of day. In conclusion, despite their higher blood cytokine levels after LPS treatment, rats of 13-18 mo old had not yet developed LPS-induced ALI, whereas rats of 19-22 mo old had developed ALI. However, the time of day did not affect the severity of ALI in LPS-treated rats.  Copyright 2020 Google LLC  Licensed under the Apache License, Version 2.0 (the "License"); * you may not use this file except in compliance with the License. * You may obtain a copy of the License at **
