The canvas looks almost perfect, but the source I'm rendering to is almost clear. Can't figure out why this is happening. A: I ran into this same issue today. I'm guessing your context is set to black, and the image you are using is totally transparent. Is this a transparent image? If so, change to a non-transparent image. You can also use CSS backgrounds to avoid this issue, for example: background: #CCC; ...or background-color: #CCC; Volcanoes Mount St. Helens in the western United States is a cone-shaped dormant volcano and the most famous of a chain of volcanoes that occurred in a rift zone where the continents are separating. Mount Fuji in Japan, which resembles a perfect, symmetrical cone, is also a dormant volcano and the youngest of a chain of active volcanoes. Mount St. Helens is in a far western state of the United States, but Mount Fuji is in an eastern state of Japan. The active volcano, Mount Kōya, at the base of Mount Fuji, is the highest and youngest of the chain of volcanoes in Japan. Mount Fuji (Japan) Mount Fuji is in Japan and e79caf774b
