Antiochus of Palestine Antiochus of Palestine () was the son of Antiochus Epiphanes of Syria, who was a Jewish priest, and a woman named Hadassah, daughter of Levi. Antiochus was an enemy of the Jews and had to flee to Egypt. Josephus (1.7.7) records that at the accession of Herod, the house of Levi was driven from the priesthood. Antiochus was imprisoned by Herod the Great, and released after the death of Herod. When he took the chair of the high priest, his enemies, the Sadducees, expelled him from Jerusalem. Josephus says

(ib. 4.1.4) that they burnt down the Temple, and that the sanctuary of the Temple was not made until the time of Herod the Great. In 2 Maccabees iii. 6, it is said that "the successors of Ananus destroyed the temple of God and tore down the holy place." But Josephus, while he says that the Temple was destroyed, does not say when. It is not possible, however, to suppose that Josephus, who in the same passage (v. 2) relates the flight of Antiochus to Egypt, also supposes that this story was current in the time of his own ancestor. The writer of 2 Maccabees was no doubt acquainted with Josephus, who knew Antiochus well, and could have easily learned the full details of this, the most brilliant of the Jewish heroes, from the priest who had lived under him. The similarity of the events is so great that it seems very likely that 2 Maccabees was written by one of the priests of the Temple under Antiochus. Josephus thus omits to mention Antiochus at the time of the destruction of Jerusalem. But if he does not mention him before the flight of Antiochus to Egypt, he does not omit his name after his return. After the death of Herod the Great he published his histories. In his Jewish Antiquities he writes of the wars which occurred before the time of Herod (1.8.1–10). He says that the Jews under their first king, Saul, subdued a great number of the Idumaeans, who were their neighbours, and took Jerusalem from them. He also gives a full account of the war waged by Herod the Great against
