What's New in the DirView?

DirView is a free tool which shows file/directory listings from a directory and its sub-directories. It is a freeware and was developed for Windows. You can define what you want to be included in the report (and what you want to be excluded) and several other options. Its main purpose is to list the files and folders and display various important details about them. It can be useful for checking directories for special files or files, and finding and organizing your files. Information is shown about file type, size, date of creation, date of last access, date of last modification, owner, group, access and the location of the file or directory in the file system. You can filter for a specific file type, or you can filter for certain file attributes. After starting the program, you can decide if you want to display file and directory names or if you just want to see the file sizes and/or modification times. The data can be exported to a variety of formats including plain text or HTML files, compressed RAR archives, or Zip archives. The program is portable, so you can copy the executable and the necessary libraries to any Windows 2000, Windows XP or Windows Server 2003 machine. While DirView is freeware, the source code is available in a Java program.
